ELIAS A. SMITH.
For County Clerk:
JOHN C. CUTLER.
For Prosecuting Attorney:
JAMES H. MOYLE.
For Recorder:
GEORGE M. CANNON.
For Assessor:
JESSE W. FOX, JR.
For Surveyor:
J. D. H. McALLISTER.
For Treasurer:
M. E. CUMMINGS.
For Sheriff:
ANDREW J. BURT.
For Coroner:
GEORGE J. TAYLOR.

DO YOUR DUTY.

The next issue of THE HERALD will tell of the result of the election in this county. If the People's Party members are true to themselves and interested in the welfare of the Territory the announcement on Tuesday morning will be the election of all nominees on the People's ticket. Necessarily the vote will be somewhat close. The parties are more nearly equally divided than ever before, and so far as the Liberals are concerned they are putting forth the greatest effort of their lives to bring out their full strength. There is, however, enough difference to give the People an overwhelming victory, if they choose to take it. If they will go to the polls and vote for the ticket which has been regularly nominated, the majority will be large enough to discourage the enemy. But it must be understood that there can be no shrinking of duty, no trusting to others as in the past. The People's Party man who fails to vote on Monday will be guilty almost of a crime, for it would be very nearly equivalent to a crime, if through the stay-at-homes the administration of the county should be lost to the bona fide residents. We do not apprehend any such catastrophe; but the threat is such that all should be spurred to the faithful performance of their duty.

LAND FRAUDS.

A Washington telegram of two or three days ago stated that Commissioner Stockslager has held for cancellation seventy-nine desert land entries in Wyoming, aggregating about 57,000 acres. It is to be hoped that this is only the beginning of a raid upon the frauds and crooks and speculators who have been stealing the public domain in our sister Territory right and left. The pre-emption, the timber culture and the desert land laws have all been employed to rob the government and deprive honest settlers of the homes which a generous government intended to give them. There are in Wyoming to-day ranches and claims covering land from five to twenty miles in extent held by individuals or companies, and it is doubted that the title to a foot of the land has been obtained by a strict and honest compliance with the law. In many instances herders and other employees of speculators have taken advantage of the liberal laws to obtain titles to land for the benefit of their employers, the latter paying all fees and expenses, merely using the names of their men. In other cases land has been entered as desert which has annually produced good crops of hay for generations past. The taking out of a small stream of water and the placing under cultivation of a little portion of a section, have been made to serve as compliance with the law requiring the reclamation of the entire tract of 640 acres. The frauds have been wholesale, and comparatively few of the entries are by bona fide settlers, either pre-emptors or homesteaders. It is barefaced evidence of fraud when one man or a stock company holds the titles to fifteen miles of what was public domain half a dozen years ago. The honest settler, the poor man for whom the government ostensibly holds the land, struggles along five or six years, and is happy if he can obtain the patent for 160 acres. It would be well if all land laws except the homestead, were repealed, and the land held for bona fide settlers, the it can hardly be brought about while the speculators and land sharks are so numerous, the authorities should be particularly careful to see that the laws are complied with strictly. It will have a good effect if some of the fraudulent land entries shall be broken and the land thrown open to honest claimants.

Valuable land is becoming so scarce that the poor man has difficulty in finding 160 acres which will yield him a living. In a few years, if the sharks and speculators are permitted to continue as they are going, there will be no public domain except in the mountains.

A PECULIARITY.

It is a fact verified by the records that there has ever been greater activity in real estate transactions in this city during the bad weather seasons than at other times. In the late spring when the city is most beautiful to look upon very little is ever done in the way of real estate sales. People do not buy. During the summer the real estate offices, as a rule, would save money by pulling down the blinds and putting up the shutters, so little being done that it scarcely pays the expense of sweeping out. The most glorious climate we have is that of the early autumn, when the weather is perfection itself, lacking in nothing which would make it desirable; and yet, when one would think that strangers would be charmed with the climate and want to live where they could always enjoy it, no one buys real estate. The real estate dealers will verify this, which has been the rule. But, remarkable as it may seem, with the setting in of foul weather, there comes an inquiry for city lots, and the price of land at once advances. Last fall and winter when the roads were so deep in mud that pedestrians would almost mire, strangers were almost wild in their desire to get hold of land. Way along in the spring—and it was an unusually late spring—tourists would get off the cars in a snow storm, and through mud, wind and sleet, go at once to a real estate office with cash enough to buy any lots which could be had at reasonable prices. When the weather became settled and Salt Lake had a really charming climate to offer with her land, the stranger admitted he did not care to buy, and home dealers were content to rest, even permitting bargains to pass unheeded.

Real estate dealers are confidently counting on the continuation of the rule, and are expecting a return of brisk business when the coming of bad weather, deep mud, chilling winds and disagreeable storms, will fetch buyers and stimulate prices. Two months more and the tide which has been running against Salt Lake since last spring will once more set in this direction and run with us at least until the return of the delightful weather next spring.

POWERS PREACHES.

Last Tuesday evening Mr. O. W. Powers delivered a political address in Burlington, Iowa, to a large audience. As Mr. Powers furnished a verbatim copy to one of the local papers, we can see that the gentleman said so much that it took 141 inches of brevier type to print his remarks. It is only the truth to state that it was a rattling good Democratic speech, giving full credit to Grover Cleveland and his administration, and correctly portraying the Republican party and its pedigree standard bearer. But Mr. Powers said one thing which will be very apt to hurt the feelings of his only admirers and friends: out this way quite as much as it pleased his Democratic audience at Burlington. It so happens that about the only people here who have done any banking on Powers are rabid Republicans, and they have slobbered over him in a disgusting sort of way. They will, therefore, feel quite as much like kicking themselves as him, when they read the following, which is copied literally from his speech, under his own sub-head of "Slavery's Sister." He here states positively things which his Republican associates are all the time emphatically denying. Will they have the courage to deny it now that Powers has openly asserted it abroad? Here is what Powers talked to the Burlington people.

The manner in which the Democracy has treated the Mormon problem furnishes an additional reason why Cleveland should be re-elected. For twenty five years the Republicans ruled this country and with each succeeding campaign its platforms denounced Mormonism as the "twisted relic of barbarism." But for all that polygamy flourished and the evil took deeper and deeper root. Crimes were committed in Utah, but the Republican officials knew them not. Laws were upon our statute books out the Republican party enforced them not. The high priests of polygamy ruled with a strong hand and grew bold and defiant. Utah, one of the fairest portions of the land—a veritable gem of the mountains—was turned over wholly to their rule. The Democratic party, in the midst of all this criminal neglect, was declared by the Republicans to be the special patron of the Mormon kingdom. The years had been rolled up into a quarter of a century, and there had only been two or three convictions in Utah, under the laws of the United States. More than this: I make the charge boldly and knowingly when I say that there were officials sent to Utah, who received nothing toward enforcing the law, received small salaries, lived expensively and came away from these rich men. The Democratic party made no high sounding promises, but when Grover Cleveland became President, the Mormon chiefs felt a strong hand upon them. It was the hand of the law, since his inauguration, upwards of seven hundred polygamists have been indicted. At the same time, a policy of conciliation has been pursued and the result is a matter of history. Utah is prosperous. The Mormon leaders are in hiding and are striving to keep without the shadow of a penitentiary. The people are beginning to

THE COMPILED LAWS.

If the late Legislature had done no more than provide for the compilation and publication of the Territorial Statutes it would have been entitled to much praise. The statutes have long been out of print and some of the session laws were so scarce as to be the cause of great annoyance to officials, the bar and public. Before us are the Compiled Laws of Utah, just issued from the bindery, in the form of two handsome volumes of 865 and 916 pages. In addition to all the Territorial laws now in force, the books contain the Declaration of Independence, Constitution of the United States, and the Congressional Statutes relating to the Territories, as well as the United States laws specially applicable to this Territory; and also all the land and mining laws. The text is sectioned and annotated, and the volumes are conveniently and intelligibly indexed. For once Utah may feel pride in her statute books.

In this connection it is only just to compliment the legislative committee on compilation, and the publisher, Mr. H. Pembroke, upon the correctness and general appearance of the work. Mr. Pembroke informs us that he put the matter in hand on April 12th, and until July 13th, ten men were constantly engaged in the typographical work; since which ten folders and sewers and four expert binders have been employed steadily, the whole being under the immediate direction and oversight of the publisher himself.

HENRY'S FORK.

Concerning a Full Familiar Region.

HENRY'S FORK, WYO., August 2. This is a tributary of Green river and an old stamping ground for the mountaineers. For the last 50 years these men and their wives (in most cases Indian women) have spent their winters up and down this creek, as they have always found good pasture for their flocks and herds, with no snow to interfere with grazing. There are some 45 to 60 families in this vicinity scattered along for 35 miles. Some of the number are mountain men above referred to with their families of mixed blood. Schools have been established, but many of the scholars have several miles to travel to the school house. Their mode of going to and fro is by horseback.

Stock growing is the general occupation of the inhabitants. Timber, land, water and grass are in abundance. The climate is somewhat colder than Salt Lake, yet almost all kinds of vegetables and cereals grow here and with a little cultivation would yield profitably. Stock men as a rule are somewhat a "tired" lot and require more rest than the average mortal. Consequently less improvements appear about their homes. We refer more particularly to the rural districts.

There are two postoffices in Henry's Fork, viz: Burnt Fork and Lone Tree. The latter is situated twenty-five miles south of Burnt Fork, the former thirty miles south of the Fort. A part of Henry's Fork Valley (upper end) is covered by the military reservation of Fort Bridger.

Speaking of Bridger, there are five companies of infantry quartered there. This is conceded to be the finest military post in the Department. Many of the people who crossed the trail will remember the old log fort in the days of the original owner, viz: Jim Bridger. The old cobble stone fort that was built afterwards by the late Lewis Robinson, of Salt Lake, has given place to a fine stone house, as the home of a full company of soldiers. There has been a number of fine houses built here the last year, for both officers and men.

The command under Major Andrews will strike tents early to-morrow morning, and take up their march for Strawberry Valley, Utah, where they will be joined by soldiers from Fort Douglas and DuChesne. Their stay in camp will be about two months. The men are very much delighted with the proposed change. Bridger troops will travel via Evanston, Coalville and Heber City.

The country about Fort Supply has been taken up by the M. E. Carter estate and fenced for miles around. The old Mormon canal or ditch has continued to flow and a very large and fine meadow has grown from its overflow. This same ditch is now called "Willow Creek. The fact is, it is the result of hard toil, wrung from the hardy pioneers of Utah who abandoned their possessions in the year 1857, while Johnson's army invaded these regions.

South's Fork, just south of Bridger, is being settled by ranches and many a fine ranch there is on this creek, although government holds a grip on the soil for eighty miles each way. The honest rancher lives in hopes that Uncle Sam will some day release his grip on this lovely portion of his domain. The road to Ashley's Fork, Utah, crosses the Uintan range about thirty-five miles southeast of Fort Bridger, via Burnt Fork. Some copper mines are being worked by one Mr. Dyer, on the mountains. The gentleman is sanguine he has "struck it."

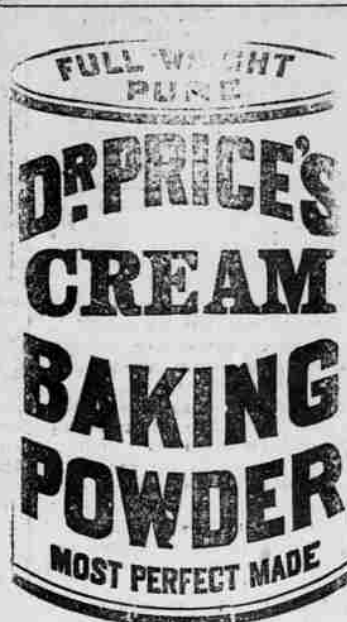

We have met several old Utah men in this country, among them Jared Bullock, an old fort supply man who has always had a hankering for this country. Uncle Jared counts his cattle by the hundreds at each "round up."

Isaac Bullock, Jr., son of Isaac of Provo, is here with his stock of cattle and horses. His amiable little wife is terrible home sick. As an angler she beats them all. The other day Mrs. B. caught fifty trout in almost less time than it takes me to write it. We enjoyed the venison like a man went out and procured, while we rested, and ate with the good family. May their increase of cows and calves prove satisfactory, and their little locks come on to their heads content.

Hon. Wm. M. Sumner, representative from Uintah County is the first man we struck on Henry's Fork. His lady, formerly of Provo City and daughter of John Hoopes, holds the reins as postmistress of Lone Tree, and presides over the domestic affairs of the ranch with becoming dignity.

Some enterprising saw mill man could grow rich in this country. They
